Power of Painting on Brutes.

FROM THE AMERICAN MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

Mr. Editor,

If the following anecdote of the power of painting, in deceiving canine sagacity, strike you as forcibly as it did me, I am confident you will give it a place in your Miscellany. I confess I do not recollect to have heard of an analogous case.

In the year 1815, Dr. Buchanan. of the United States' Navy, stationed at Sackett's Harbor, having sent his son to New-York for the purpose of taking passage for Europe, wrote to a friend in this city to select a portrait painter, and have the boy's likeness pourtrayed and sent to him. This was done, and some time after his friend received a letter expressing the father's approbation of the portrait, and relating a singular occurrence evincing the truth of the resemblance.

"My friend, captain Heilman, has a fine pointer dog, named Pero. My dear James being an excellent shot, and fond of sporting, an intimacy was consequently formed between him and Mr. Pero—who would frequently call (as it were) for James to go a hunting. After James's absence he repeated his visit about once a week, as if seeking his former friend. The first visit he paid after the arrival of Dunlap's semblance of his sporting companion was truly affecting—The moment he came into the door the picture struck his eyes—he stood motionless, one leg raised and his tail wagging for a few moments—he then seemed to have identified the truth of his own sight: he rapidly approached it, whining and wagging his tail—jumped upon the chair over which it stood, and placing his fore-paws on the frame, licked the hands of his quondam young friend: and this visit he repeats frequently, standing, ere his departure, with his eyes fixed on the picture and with his tail wagging adieu. I presume this fact has taken place a dozen times, and in the presence of a dozen people."

Yours, &c. R. T.

SINGULAR STORY.

[From a Portsmouth (England) paper.]

By a letter we have received from France we learn the following very singular story:—"A strange circumstance occurred lately at Brest; a man in the last stage of a dangerous disorder, sent for a priest to give him extreme unction; the priest after some conversation with the man, told him, that he could not give him extreme unction without he surrendered up the lands that he held, and which belonged to the church previous to the revolution. In vain did the poor man point out that he had purchased them at a fair valuation, and had a large family to bequeath them to; the priest told him, if he did not he would be d——d and go to hell; the poor man replied, he would not give up the land, but take his chance. In a few days he died, and was refused the rites of the church, or christian burial, in consequence of his having died without receiving extreme unction; and the priest told his family that he was certain of going to hell, and that the Devil would come that night and take away his body. The wretched family were dreadfully alarmed, and they employed an old soldier to sit up all night and watch the corpse, furnishing him with a bottle of wine, bread and cheese, and a sword to protect himself. At midnight the door flew open and in walked three figures, dressed so as to appear devils; they walked round the room to try to intimidate the soldier, but the veteran who had never feared to oppose an enemy, was not to be panick struck, but broke silence and accosted them in these words: "You, Mr. Devils, if one of you lays a hand upon that body, I will cut it off."

After some time, one more courageous than the rest, seized upon the feet of the corpse, and another took hold of his head; the soldier immediately made a chop at the hand of the first, and nearly cut off his arm; the other he wounded on the shoulder; a scuffle ensued, but in a short time the devils disappeared, leaving a large quantity of blood behind them, which showed they were human:

The next day the family waited on the Prefect, and related to him this strange circumstance; when he sent for the priest who had refused to give extreme unction. The priest returned for answer, that he was unwell, and could not attend him; after several messengers had been dispatched, without success, to inform him he must come, a guard of soldiers was sent, who brought him up, and he proved to be the very person whom the soldier had cut across the arm; his accomplices have been traced out, and they are all now safely lodged in prison."

Last week at Warwick, a marriage was celebrated, which is the lady's fourth, within the last five years, and her third since her present husband first preferred his suit. On the decease of her first husband, this gentleman applied at the end of a fortnight but, unhappily, he was too late. On the decease of the second, he had an invitation to the funeral, and notwithstanding the opportunity thus furnished, the lady was again engaged. It was however his good fortune to lose his second rival in the course of a few months—and on this occasion, he secured the promise of his bride in a few minutes after her late husband departed.

London pap.

Count Romanzoff, a Russian nobleman, no less distinguished for his eminent talents than his great wealth, has lately undertaken several most patriotic projects, for the instruction and improvement of his countrymen. He has built four churches upon his estates for different sects of Christians; he has also, at his own expense, engaged and sent a vessel round the world on a voyage of discovery; he is also about to establish some schools on an improved system of education, for the direction of which he has sent for a competent English instructor.

The system of iron paving seems to be coming into use in the metropolis, and promises to be highly beneficial. Already the stone pavers are alarmed for the safety of this great city, and with much solicitude wish to call upon Parliament to prevent the laying down of such an immense area of an electric conductor, as will bring all the thunder to London!—How comes it, that Parliament have so long suffered the Thames to pass so near this great metropolis?——LONDON PAPER.

LONGEVITY. A late memoir of Sweden, states that there was lately found, during a period of nine or ten years, 2036 men and 3570 women above the age of 60; 212 men and 228 women between 100 and 105; 31 men and 26 women between 106 and 110; 28 men and 19 women between 111 and 120, one man aged 122, and one woman 127. Sweden is more temperate than any land in Asia or America in the same latitudes.

Dr. Foster has of late been making some observations on the heads of insane persons, with a view to determine how far the particular organization of the head appears to modify the character of the maniac. He has found, in a majority of cases, a very striking connexion, particularly in regard to the melancholy insane, who have been found to have the parts of the brain, which, according to the new system, produced the sentiment of fear, much developed. It is to be hoped, that repeated observations of this kind may lead to important discoveries in the history of those interesting, but at present obscure class of disorders. [London Mag.

The following appropriate eulogium is copied from a critique in the Edinburgh Review of 1810, on Broadhurst's advice to young Ladies.

"Women have all ignorant men for enemies to their instruction, who being bound, (as they think) in point of sex, to know more, are not well pleased, in point of fact, to know less. But among men of sense and liberal politeness, a woman who has successfully cultivated her mind without diminishing the gentleness and propriety of her manners, is always sure to meet with a respect and attention bordering on enthusiasm."

The first newspaper published in Great Britain was on the 28th July, 1583, and was entitled "The English Mercury," one of which it is said is now in the British Museum.

BOLTING! An English paper mentions, that six journeymen Rope-makers, at Plymouth, lately ate, upon a wager, 43 pounds of Beef, without bone, at one sitting, together with bread, &c.

Neglect and Ruin of Churches.—In a late Liverpool paper, it is mentioned as a serious and remarkable fact that within the last seventy years, many of the finest ancient Churches in Great Britain, in consequence of constant neglect, have suddenly fallen down in utter ruin." In support of the truth of this remark, the Editor adduces the following instances. "About the year 1750, the large Parish Church of Whitechurch, in Shropshire, instantaneously fell on a Sunday, between the morning and evening service. In the year 1786 part of the great nave, and the whole of the curious and magnificent front of Hereford Cathedral gave way and in a moment became a heap of ruins. In the same year, the large Parish Church of St. Chad in Shewsberry, also suddenly fell down.—In the following year, the Church of Cinbury, one of the largest in the kingdom, shared the same fate; and the newspapers of 1800 informed us of the sudden & complete ruin of the beautiful Church of Chelmsford, in Essex. 1809, the steeple of St. Nicholas Church, Liverpool, fell on the Sabbath, whilst the congregation were assembling for morning service, and killed and maimed a great number!"

Of many a foolish love-quarrel, is drawn in the following extract from the "Citizen of the World."

"At dinner, every thing seemed to run on with good humour, harmony and satisfaction. Every creature in company thought themselves pretty, and every jest was laughed at: the man in black sat next his mistress, helped her plate, chimed her glass, and jogging her knees and her elbow, he whispered something arch in her ear, on which she pattea his cheek; never was antiquated passion so playful, so harmless, and amusing, as between this reverend couple.

"The second course was now called for, and among a variety of other dishes, a fine turkey was placed before the widow. The Europeans, you know, carve as they eat; my friend therefore begged his mistress to help him to a part of the turkey. The widow, pleased with an opportunity of showing her skill in carving, an art upon which it seems she piqued herself; began to cut it up by first taking off the leg. Madam, cries my friend, if I might be permitted to advise, I would begin by cutting off the wing, and then the leg will come off more easily. Sir, replies the widow, give me leave to understand cutting up a fowl, I always begin with the leg. Yes, Madam, replies the lover, but if the wing be the most convenient manner, I would begin with the wing. Sir, interrupts the lady, when you have fowls of your own, begin with the wing if you please, but give me leave to take off the leg; I hope I am not to be taught at this time of day. Madam, interrupts he, we are never too old to be instructed. Old, Sir, interrupts the other, who is old Sir? when I die of age, I know of some that will quake for fear; if the leg does not come off, take the turkey to yourself. "Madam, replied the man in black, I do not care a farthing whether the leg or wing comes off; if you are for the leg first, why you shall have the argument, even though it be as I say." As for the matter of that, cries the widow, I do not care a fig, whether you are for the leg off or on; and friend, for the future, keep your distance. O, replied the other, that is easily done, it is only removing to the other end of the table, and so, Madam, your most obedient humble servant.

Thus was this courtship of an age destroyed in one moment; for this dialogue effectually broke off the match between this respectable couple, that had just been concluded."

MILLEDGEVILLE, (GEO.) AUG. 12.

SALES OF ALABAMA LANDS.

The public lands now selling here have brought, so far, good prices. Prime river low grounds average from 40 to 50 dollars. A fraction of 170 acres, part of the Big Bend of the Alabama, sold as high as seventy dollars the acre. Other parcels adjoining were bid off above 40 and 50 dollars. A large fraction, containing several hundred acres of high land, on the Big Bend, and said to be an excellent scite for a town, sold for 50 dollars an acre. In that township, (No. 16 in Range 17) purchasers, it is believed were found for every section. Those best acquainted with the choice Alabama low grounds assert, that its fertility is inexhaustible, and that it will produce for almost an indefinite term of years, in constant cultivation, 100 bushels of corn to the acre! This assertion is repeated by so many respectable persons, who know the land, that great as the product may appear, we cannot suppose there is any exaggeration.——JOURNAL.

Extract of a letter to Dr. Spalding of this City.

DEAR SIR—It will no doubt give you much pleasure to learn, that miss Rachel Baker has been cured of her Devotional Somnium. The cure of this extraordinary disease was performed last autumn, by Doctors Sears and Baker, of Norway, (Herkimer county, New-York,) by dashing cold water upon her, as proposed by you in your lectures in our college. They however, improved on your suggestions, by desiring her to change the hour of her devotion; then giving her a large dose of opium in the afternoon; and in the evening, the moment the convulsions began to appear, they dashed cold water upon her, which, entirely interrupted the paroxysm, and prevented her preaching. During the night, however, the convulsive paroxysm returned, but was carried off by a second dash of cold water.

This plan was pursued for about a week or ten days, when the disease manifested no further disposition to return. She has now recovered her usual health and vigor after having laboured under this disease for five years.——N. Y. D ADV.

On Friday last the citizens of Pittsburgh re gratified by the long anticipated arri- of the President. On this occasion we lieve that no exertion was spared and no rk of attention omitted to render the ption of our distinguished visitor cor- and respectful. A few miles from the he was met by the Committee of Ar- gement and conducted to the ferry, re an elegant barge, rowed by four sea- tains, waited his approach. As he de- ded the hill to the river a national sa- was fired from the city, and a band of sic attended the barge while crossing. landing he was received with military nours by capt. Irwin's Company of Vol- eer Light Infantry, and by the citizens loud acclamations. A coach with four es waited to convey him to his lodgings, bserving that the authorities of the Ci- ere on foot he chose to walk also.

The order of the procession was as fol- s:

1. City Guards.

The officers of the Pennsylvania Militia in uniform.

The Deputy Marshal of the District of Pennsylvania; the High Sheriff and Coroner of the County with their staves.

The Mayor and Recorder of the City.

. The Committee of Arrangement.

HE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The Suite of the President and officers of the United States' Army.

17. The Cavalcade of Citizens.

hus formed, the Procession proceeded Market Street to Fourth street, up orth to Wood Street, down Wood to ater Street, and thence to the house of illiam Wilkins, Esq. where preparations been made for his reception, and where as received in a manner which reflects t credit on the taste and liberality of gentleman, to whose polite and public ed exertions we are so much indebt- on this occasion. On the following ning the Municipality of the City wait- him and the following address was ered by JAMES ROSS, Esq. President e Select Council and Chairman of the mittee of Arrangement:

TO JAMES MONROE, ESQUIRE, ESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

PRESIDENT,

he Select and Common Councils, the or. Aldermen, and Citizens of Pitts- , have instructed me to offer you their atulations and most cordial welcome our arrival in this city:

rejoice at seeing a President of the States for the first time upon the ern waters; and the interest we feel his visit is greatly enhanced by the recollection that we see in his per- the early, uniform, active friend of western country, who was finally suc- ful in securing to us the invaluable of free communication with the ocean the Mississippi; an attainment l in magnitude only to national inde- ence itself, and inseparably connect- th it.

e anticipate the happiest results from personal examination of the frontier ell as of the interior of this portion of nion;—your confidence in the resour- of the great Republic over which you ide, will be strengthened by observing unexampled increase of population, abitual industry, our progress in ag- ure, manufactures, & the useful arts, he immense region of fertility which mains a public stock.

hile the people witness your paternal tion to their local advantages and s, as well as to their external safety, see the public good anxiously sought nd cherished in the west, as well as ast, without distinction of persons or s, we are perfectly assured, that their ions, as well as their duty will every e unite them in support of the meas- you may find most conducive to the ic interest during your administration.

e ardently wish you the continuance ng life and health to pursue the course ave so auspiciously begun, and that at end of your career you may receive and the richest reward of a patriot's toils ATIONAL GRATITUDE for having sented NATIONAL HAPPINESS.

With great pleasure I avail myself of this occasion to renew to you the assurances of my own very high consideration and respect.

To which the President returned the following answer:

TO JAMES ROSS, ESQ.

Chairman of the committee, deputed by the City of Pittsburgh.

SIR,—Returning from a tour along a large portion of our Atlantic and inland frontiers, which I undertook from a sense of duty, I am happy to pass through this town, and have been much gratified by the friendly reception which has been given me by the Select and Common Councils, and by the Mayor, Aldermen, and citizens of Pittsburgh.

Knowing no difference between the just claims of one portion of our country and another, I consider it my duty, to attend equally to the rights and interests of the whole. It is on this principle that I undertook this tour, and that I shall extend it hereafter, should I be blessed with health, to other parts of our union.

Having from very early life, in every station I have held, used my best efforts to obtain for my fellow citizens the free navigation of the Mississippi, no one could be more gratified than I was, at its final accomplishment. The favorable opinion which you kindly express of my services, in support of that great right, is peculiarly gratifying to me; I owe it, however, to candor to state, that I have no other merit than that of an honest zeal exerted in its support, in obedience to the instructions of the government, under which I acted, and in harmony with my venerable associate in the treaty which secured it.

I have seen with great interest in this tour, the most satisfactory proofs of the rapid growth of this portion of our union—of the industry of its inhabitants—and of their progress in agriculture, manufactures, and the useful arts. I have derived great satisfaction, also, from the opportunity it has afforded me of forming a more just estimate, than I could otherwise have obtained, of the vast amount, great fertility, and value of public lands, yet to be disposed of.

Devoted to the principles of our free, republican constitution; incapable of discriminating between the rights and interests of the Eastern and Western sections of our union; and having no friendships to serve, or resentments to gratify at the expense of the public welfare, I shall steadily pursue these objects, by such a course of impartial and upright policy, as shall appear, according to my best judgement most likely to secure them. Acting on these principles, I shall always calculate with confidence on the support of my fellow citizens in such measures as may be found conducive to the public welfare.

Permit me, sir, to offer through you to the Select and Common Councils, the Mayor, Aldermen and Citizens of Pittsburgh my best wishes for their welfare, and to request you to be assured of my great consideration, and respect for you personally.

JAMES MONROE.

On the same morning the President visited the United States' Arsenal near this place. On Sunday morning he attended the Episcopal Church and in the afternoon the Presbyterian meeting; and while this article is going to press (Monday) we understand that he will remain here this day for the purpose of visiting our manufactories and will leave this on Tuesday, for Brownsville, intending to return to the seat of Government, by way of the U. S. turnpike. Generals Brown and Macomb will repair hence to ther respective commands.

This city, has never perhaps on any previous occasion, exhibited a spectacle so lively and interesting as was presented on the arrival of the President. The shore of the Monongahela, was lined with an immense concourse, consisting of the population of the city, augmented by a number of strangers and many visitors from the surrounding country—the spot which but a few years ago was a wilderness, now glowed with a living multitude—and the chief magistrate of a great nation was greeted in the streets of a city, upon the ground which had been the scene of savage broils at the commencement of his public career.

In Virginia, the rich low grounds on both branches of the Pamunkey River, which exhibited the most astonishing growth of corn, have been considerably overflown, and it is apprehended the crop has sustained much damage. So powerful was the rain in the country of Powhattan, that a mill dam, built in 1704, which has braved the storms of more than one hundred years, was swept off with some oak trees that had grown upon it.

THE SERPENT.

The Salem Register, under date of the 28th ult. states, "that a party well prepared proceeded to attack the great Sea Serpent, if he could be found—on the 30th some firing was heard from Salem, and some faint hopes were entertained that a successful attack had been made upon him. Several persons from Boston have gone towards Cape Ann—in hopes to get a sight of the monster."

It is probable that this uncommon creature has been attracted to our shores by the immense shoal of herrings which are known to have lately entered the Eastern rivers. Several weeks before the appearance of the serpent, we noticed this uncommon swarm of herring, and quoted some account of their migratory movements from a European writer, who says, that "their migration commences at their rendezvous in the Icy Sea, within the Arctic circle, where they collect their several colonies into one grand army, and begin their march about the middle of winter.

They afterwards separate, one division pouring down along the coast of America, the other towards Europe." It is probable that the Icy Sea, far from the usual haunts of men, is the place of residence of this enormous creature, and that he has crossed the Atlantic in pursuit of the herrings.

Patriot.

We are told that two Sharks appeared to be almost constantly in attendance on the great sea-serpent at Gloucester; whether as his humble servants, or a reconnoitering party, to see what sort of a gentleman he is, or to find some vulnerable part and watch some favourable opportunity to attack and destroy him, is not known.

In Rollin's Ancient History, under the head of "First Punic War," the following account is given of an enormous serpent which was slain by the Roman army under Regulus, after the departure of his colleague Manlius for Rome. The monster seems to have borne a strong affinity to the one lately seen in the harbour of Gloucester. In the interval, betwixt the departure of Manlius, and the taking of Tunis, we are to place the memorable combat of Regulus and his whole army with a serpent of so prodigious a size, that the fabulous one of Cadmus is hardly comparable to it. The story of this serpent was elegantly written by Livy, but it is now lost. Valerius Maximus, however, partly repairs that loss; and, in the last chapter of his first book, gives us the account of this monster from Livy himself. He, Livy, says, that on the banks of Bagrada, an African river, lay a serpent of such enormous size that it kept the Roman army from coming to the river Several soldiers had been buried in the wide caverns of its belly, and many pressed to death in the spiral volumes of its tail. Its skin was impenetrable to darts; and it was with repeated endeavours that stones slung from military engines, at last killed it. The serpent then exhibited a sight that was more terrible to the Roman cohorts & legions than even Carthage itself. The streams of the river were died with its blood; and the stench of its putrified carcase infecting the adjacent country, the Roman army was forced to decamp. Its skin 120 feet long, was sent to Rome; and if Pliny may be credited, was to be seen, together with the jawbone of the same monster, in the temple where they were first deposited, as low as the Numantine war."

The Longitude.—A writer in the National Intelligencer asserts that Drs. Hull and Abbott, (of Geo.) have invented a machine which indicates with precision the longitude in all situations. This has been done, he states, by giving to the magnet a permanent meridional as well as polar attractive government.

J. Sommers, a Jew Pawn Broker, in Chatham street, was convicted and fined on Friday last, one hundred dollars, at the suit of the Mayor and Corporation of the city of New York, for having charged on goods pawned with him at the rate of about 65 per cent. per annum, instead of seven as allowed by law.—N. Y. E. Post.

A fatal rencontre took place at Savannah on the seventeenth ult. between Mr. O'Driscoll and Mr. Edwards, in which the former gentleman was killed and the latter badly wounded. It is stated that in their anxiety to effect this murderous business, they had a boy and a horse drowned on their way from Charleston.

Mr O'Driscoll, was the only son of Dr. O'Driscoll, of Charleston, and in the twenty-fourth year of his age. He is represented as having been a gentleman of superior acquirements, and of the most engaging and affectionate disposition——that he made every effort consistent with a man of honor to obliterate the cause of offence, and that accident alone prevented the reconciliation. The deceased has left a young wife in the most interesting situation.

Death of Mr. Ponsonby.—It is probable our readers are prepared for the intelligence we have now the pain to communicate—the death of this excellent gentleman. He departed this life this morning about 10 minutes after 6 o'clock. All men of all parties may well deplore the loss of such a man. He gave dignity to the party of which he was the leader, by the talents he displayed in his public, and by the virtues he exhibited in his private character. Mr. P. was between 50 and 60 years of age; of a frame and cast that promised a much longer life; his person rather inclined to plethoric; his countenance was strong and marked.——London paper.
